ABSTRACT

This second annual report of openings, closings, mergers, and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities is part of a study to provide baseline data for observing the changes in the independent sector of higher education. The information was compiled from a survey of state postsecondary agencies and state associations of independent colleges and universities, and from two other publications. Among the highlights of the period from winter 1970 through summer 1978: 64 independent colleges and branch campuses were founded, though 129 closed and 42 merged with other independent institutions; 17 colleges shifted to public control; 325 institutions and branch campuses attained accredited status from nationally recognized agencies, and none (other than those closing) lost accreditation; and the greatest net loss of institutions occurred during 1975-1978. The listings of institutions are by type of change (first-time openings, closings, mergers, shift to public control, attainment of accreditation and by type of institution. Among the information given for each institution is: year of founding, year entered in the Education Directory, type of program (two-, four-year, or specialized program), accreditation agency, headcount enrollment, single-sex or coed, and religious affiliation. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This report is the second annual report of openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Winter 1970 through Summer 1978. The purpose of this report is to provide accurate information about the status of independent institutions. By 1980 we will have provided accurate baseline data for a decade about the changes that took place in the independent sector. It is our hope that other researchers utilizing this information will start to investigate why and how these changes took place.

The information for this report was compiled from a survey of state postsecondary agencies and state associations of independent colleges and universities. The study also utilized data compiled in the annual publication of the Education Directory, prepared by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education, prepared by the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation. Every effort was made to verify information contained in this study through contact with national accrediting agencies and individual institutions.

This study could not have been completed without the cooperation of various associations, agencies, and institutions. I would like to thank Susan Richardson, NIICU's secretary who typed several drafts of the report cheerfully. However, the full responsibility for the analysis of the data rests with the author.

OPENINGS, CLOSINGS, MERGERS AND ACCREDITATION STATUS
OF INDEPENDENT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES, WINTER 1970 - SUMMER 1978

In its concern to monitor the health and vitality of the independent sector, the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities (NIICU) conducted a study of the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Winter 1970 through Summer 1978. The information was derived from a survey of state postsecondary agencies and state associations of independent higher education, from the annual publications of the Education Directory, and from Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education. Every effort was made to verify the data contained in this study through direct contact with nationally recognized accrediting agencies and individual institutions.

Highlights of the Study

- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1978, a total of 64 independent colleges and branch campuses were founded: 10 two-year colleges, 31 four-year colleges, and 23 specialized institutions.
- During this period 129 independent colleges and branch campuses closed: 42 two-year colleges, 49 four-year colleges, and 38 specialized institutions.
- In addition to the closings during this period, 42 independent colleges and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions: eight two-year colleges, 23 four-year colleges, and 11 specialized institutions.
- Furthermore, 17 independent colleges shifted to public control: seven two-year colleges, six four-year colleges, and four specialized institutions.
- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1978, 325 independent institutions and branch campuses attained accredited status from nationally recognized accrediting agencies: 70 two-year colleges, 158 four-year colleges, and 97 specialized institutions.
- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1978, other than those institutions which closed, no independent institutions lost accreditation.
- From Winter 1970 through Summer 1978, the independent sector suffered a net loss of 65 institutions. From 1975 through 1978, the greatest net loss occurred. During these years only three institutions were founded while 40 institutions were closed.

Methods Summary

The purpose of this study is to present accurate information on the openings, closings, mergers and accreditation status of independent colleges and universities from Winter 1970 through Summer 1978. However, there is no attempt to analyze why colleges have opened, closed or merged.

During July and August of 1978, a survey was conducted at state postsecondary agencies and state associations of independent colleges and universities. These agencies were asked to verify closings and openings of independent institutions in their respective states listed in the Education Directory as of Fall 1977 and to add any changes (additions or corrections) through June 30, 1978. Responses were received from 51 states and territories. In the four states who did not respond, direct contact was made with institutions to verify information.

Another major source for this study was the Education Directory which is published annually by the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The three criteria used for inclusion in the Education Directory are: (1) accreditation by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or state department of education, (2) preaccreditation status by one of these agencies, or (3) acceptance of an institution's credits as though coming from an accredited institution by at least three accredited institutions. Although there are many colleges in existence who do not meet these criteria, they are not included in the study.

The criteria used for determining accreditation status was accreditation by national accrediting agencies recognized by the Council on Postsecondary Education.¹ The primary source for verifying accreditation status was Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education 1977-78.² Some information was verified through direct contact with institutions and recognized accrediting agencies, particularly in cases where institutions have recently attained preaccredited status.

In the detailed tables which follow, institutions are classified as two-year, four-year or specialized institutions.³ Information is given ¹Council on Postsecondary Accreditation, "Recognized Accrediting Groups," July, 1977.

²Council on Postsecondary Accreditation, Accredited Institutions of Postsecondary Education 1978-79, ed. by Sherry S. Harris (Washington, D.C.: American Council on Education), 1978.

³In addition to other specialized institutions, this category includes single purpose institutions, some of which are "closed enrollment" institutions; that is, schools only open to seminarians or religious women which are used for training students for religious orders.

about enrollment, founding dates, accreditation status, affiliation, and the date when information about a change of status was recorded in the Education Directory. Changes, which did not or have not appeared in the Education Directory are noted on these tables.

There were 64 independent colleges and branch campuses founded between 1970 and 1978 that met the criteria⁴ for inclusion in the Education Directory. We have no reliable data on the number of colleges founded that have not met these criteria. Of these, Table 1 shows that 10 (16%) were two-year colleges, 31 (48%) were four-year colleges, and 23 (36%) were specialized institutions.

² Openings for the most part are from the Education Directory, published annually, for Summer 1978 information is from the NIICU survey of post-secondary state agencies and state associations of independent higher education.

⁴ See Appendix I: Criteria for Listing in the Education Directory.

Perhaps the most significant finding, and portent of the future to come, are the trends evident from Table 1 which lists institutions by founding dates. Over ninety-five percent (61) of the institutions opened since 1970 were founded by 1974. Only three colleges were founded since 1974, and no new foundings occurred in 1977 and 1978 that were qualified, at least, to be reported in the Education Directory. Essentially foundings in the independent sector ceased to keep up with closings as of 1974 signalling the end of a growth period in higher education and graphically illustrating the "steady state" which has characterized American higher education for the past few years. (See Appendix IV: Founding Dates of Accredited Independent Institutions.)

Over four-fifths of the institutions founded were independent of affiliation as illustrated in Figure 1. Over three-quarters of these schools have an enrollment of less than 500 (1977 Fall Headcount Enrollment) which is higher than the total distribution of enrollment nationally at independent institutions. (Almost 61 percent of independent institutions nationally have enrollments below 500.) Only three (5%) of the institutions opened were single sex, and these were seminaries or specialized institutions.

From Winter 1970 to Summer 1978, 129 independent institutions and branch campuses closed. Of these, 42 (33%) were two-year colleges, 49 (38%) were four-year colleges, and 38 (29%) were specialized institutions. Table 2 shows some changes from the previous study of openings, closings and mergers of independent institutions through Spring 1976. Two institutions are no longer counted as closed in 1976: Alaska Methodist University was closed and reopened (see Table 10), and the Carribbean Center for Advanced Studies recessed for one year while moving to a new campus. Therefore, the total closings through Spring 1976 were 111 rather than 113. Since 1976, 18 more institutions have closed. Of the 38 specialized institutions, 33 (87%) were "closed enrollment" institutions; i.e., they were seminaries or religious schools for women and men that served primarily as formation houses.

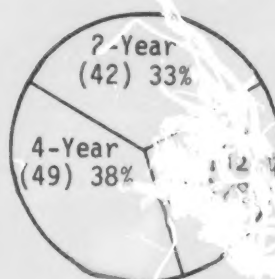

¹Branch campuses are counted as separate institutions.

The major increase in closings among types of institutions has been in four-year colleges which represented 34 percent of the closings from 1970 to 1976, but 38 percent through 1978.

Out of 129 institutions, 57 percent were church-related although 33 of these 73 schools were "special purpose" religious schools. Over two-fifths of the institutions which closed were coed. Figure 7 shows that over 85 percent of the institutions which closed had enrollments under 500. This percentage is significantly higher than enrollment distributions at independent institutions nationally. About three-fifths (61%) of independent institutions have enrollments under 500. Less than 15 percent of the institutions which closed had enrollments over five hundred. Over three-fifths of the institutions which closed were coed while almost two-fifths were single sex.

During this period 42 independent institutions and branch campuses merged with other independent institutions: eight (19%) were two-year colleges; 23 (55%) were four-year colleges; and 11 (26%) were specialized institutions.

Almost seventy percent of these institutions were church-related and three-tenths were non-sectarian. At the year of their mergers, almost two-thirds of these colleges had enrollments below 500, 19 percent had enrollments under 1000 and 17 percent had enrollments over 1000. Approximately four-fifths of these institutions were coed or coordinate and one-fifth was single sex.

From Winter 1970 to Summer 1978, 17 independent institutions shifted to public control: seven (41%) were two-year colleges; six (35%) were four-year colleges; and four (24%) were specialized institutions.

Of this group, Figure 12 shows that only one institution was church-related and the rest were non-sectarian. Over half of these institutions had enrollments of under 500 when they shifted to public control, over one-third had enrollments under 1000, and slightly more than one-tenth had enrollments over 1000. From Winter 1970 through Summer 1978, 325 institutions and branch campuses attained accreditation or candidacy for accreditation status, and thus were included in the Education Directory or in Accredited Institutions in Postsecondary Education. This represents a 24 percent increase over the 262 institutions reported as of Fall 1976. These colleges, therefore, were counted as part of the total number of higher education institutions in the country, although their founding dates in most cases precede 1970. Of these 325 institutions, 70 (21%) were two-year colleges, 158 (49%) were four-year colleges, and 97 (30%) were specialized institutions. During this period, other than institutions which closed, no independent institutions lost accreditation.

The 325 independent institutions which were accredited or achieved candidacy since 1970 account for slightly more than one-fifth (22%) of the 1451 accredited institutions in the independent sector. (See Appendix IV: Founding Dates of Accredited Independent Institutions.) Of these 325, 56 percent were independent (non-sectarian) and 44 percent had some religious affiliation. More than half of these institutions had enrollments below 500, one-fifth had enrollments below 1000, and 17 percent had enrollments over 1000. Over nine-tenths of these institutions were co-educational.
